A Little Insight of Balinese Cuisine and Eating Habits

In Bali, day to day meals are simple, with lots of rice and usually two dishes and a plate of spicy sambal. Food is prepared early in the morning by the housewives followed by ritualistic offerings to Gods before it is allowed to be eaten.

The food will be left covered on a table where family members can just help themselves with the food whenever they want. There is usually no proper dining table. They just fill their plates with lots of rice & a small quantity of the dishes and retreat to their favourite spot nearby, usually alone, anytime they feel hungry.

Extravagant feasts of Balinese food are only available during temple ceremonies, weddings, births and other religious events. Believe it or not, only the men are allowed to cook in those occasions. Women are tasked to prepare religious offerings required in those events.

The characteristic flavour of Balinese food comes from the generous use of cekuh (lesser galangal) and isen (galangal), aside from other spices rather similar to those used in Malay cooking. Bebek betutu, urutan & lawar are the dishes that best represent "that" Balinese flavour.

Most Balinese food is cooked dry, intensified in flavour and spicy for the purpose of longer safe keeping. If you are not used to dry food, please ask for Sambal Kecap.

Samble Mbe (pronounce as embah), the one with deep fried onions and chillies, is the best companion for rice. Do mix with rice and eat. And very importantly, try eating with your hand the Balinese way, everything just tastes better.

Selamat makan !

Enjoy your meal !
